

Camille McOuat

Felix and the Hand

Camille is excited by spontaneity and strives to take photos that make you laugh or raise an eyebrow. You can find her wandering the streets looking for weird and tender moments, or in the shower, paralyzing the drops that seem to float in front of our faces.

In fact, the shower is her happiest place, and the main other way for her to replicate this womblike state through photography is to take a trip to somewhere she has never been and to photograph what she sees through the eyes of a freshborn babe.

Oh, that and the way some of her photographs bend our perceptions of the body and gravity, making us giddy and disoriented.
